Junior-Senior Prom

PROM! the biggest dance of the year and the one most looked forward to by all the seniors and juniors! In a beautiful setting provided by the Little Theater, the theme of a Southern Plantation was carried out with tall, stately white columns, Spanish moss and magnolias around the balcony, and a canopy of crepe paper below the ceiling. Indeed, the outstanding attraction proved to be a gold fish pond in the center of the dance floor, around which were a wrought-iron table and chairs, artificial grass, and a huge magnolia tree.

A gay crowd danced to the smooth music of Warren Durrett, one of the most popular local bands. Entertainment at intermission, which was provided by Southwest students, included dances by Jerry and Joel Smith, Carol Terte, a song by Carol Jean Heuermann, and a comical skit by Bud Trillin and Bill Shapiro. In a magnolia-surrounded bowl was frosty, cool punch, and, placed within convenient reach, were dainty sandwiches and cakes.

Thanks are due to the Prom committee for spending many hours in planning the decorations and food and in making all other preparations for the dance. The chaperones for the evening were Mr. and Mrs. Cannon, Mr. and Mrs. Wesner, Mr. and Mrs. Sayler, Mr. and Mrs. Milledge, Mr. and Mrs. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett, Mrs. Bredberg, Mrs. Cox, and Mrs. Kassebaum.

Although the time passed all too swiftly, everyone agreed that this was a never-to-be-forgotten Prom and one of the most delightful evenings ever spent.

A YEAR OF PROGRESS

THIS YEAR the Student Council of Southwest proved that, with the full cooperation of the students and faculty, student government can accomplish many worthy projects. The main project of the Student Council, which was initiated by this year's Council, was the noon recreation period during the four study periods of the lunch-study hours. Beginning on the third of November, the activity period, as it was called, grew to a well organized period of recreation in which the students could relax with records, movies, and student entertainment. The great success of the project was due to the cooperation of a huge percentage of the students. Another successful project was the checking of senior activities by the research committee, which started a permanent file for this purpose. The selection of the theme of the Redskin Revels by the student body, active participation in City Hall Day, and a successful exchange assembly with Paseo were some of the other prominent activities which added to a progressive year in Southwest student government.

City Hall Day officers plan their agenda

Senior activities are examined by Research Committee

Music during recreation period aids relaxation

Campaign managers vigorously support their candidate

Home-lunch permits are carefully checked

SOUTHWEST boasts an active chapter of the Junior Red Cross, the youth division of the United States Red Cross. Its chief function is the annual Red Cross fund drive held each spring. The council has consistently led Southwest over the top in this worthy campaign. Among the other worthwhile activities of the organization are the projects for the servicemen in the near-by hospitals and the gift box sent annually to someone in a needy country. In all of these activities the Junior Red Cross Council has the support of the entire Southwest student body.

FOOTBALL

THE 1952 FOOTBALL season had its share of defeats as well as of victories. Although the Indian varsity did not live up to the pre-season expectations, on many occasions they more than justified the name of Southwest. After an initial loss to Shawnee-Mission, the eleven started their league campaign with a victory over Central. Then some bad breaks started a series of heart-breaking losses that was broken only by a victory over Paseo during the course of the regular season. However on one weekend, when there wasn't a regular game scheduled, the varsity went over to Independence to give highly rated William Chrisman a severe 27-0 trouncing. Southwest outplayed most of its opponents but bowed in defeat because of a few costly mistakes.

Since on many occasions the juniors carried much of the burden, we are looking ahead to another championship eleven next year.

ONE CANNOT imagine football at Southwest without Louis House at the helm. Not only has Coach House established a record unprecedented in the history of the Interscholastic League, but he has also been an official for the Big Seven for many years. He has always set an example of sportsmanship, and his teams have been standouts not only in skill but also in conduct. We at Southwest should be proud of this man who has done so much for the sports record of our school.

Football

WOOD ARNOLD—"Mike" was a definite asset to this year's eleven as a result of his hard blocking and jarring tackling.

STANFORD BLOCK—"Buzzy" did not take size into consideration, and proved to be outstanding in the defensive backfield.

KARL ENGLUND—This Indian was a stout man at end and could always be counted on for a key play, especially on the defensive.

TOM FOWLER—Tom took advantage of his quick reflexes to get the jump on the opponents throughout the season.

PAUL GESSLER—Paul, captain of this year's team, was an outstanding player on both the offense and the defense. He was honored by being named to the All-City team.

LYNN GOODMAN — Lynn's outstanding strength as a result of his training in weight events helped him to break up many a play.

ED HILL—This hard-driving little back proved one of the most elusive in the league, and he is sure to be a definite standout on next year's varsity.

JOHN KLOSE — John could always be counted on for a clutch block or tackle to further the cause of vicory.

DICK LOTT—Dick took every advantage of his height and weight to make a solid center in the line. He was voted a position on the second All-City team.

ROGER ORNDUFF—Because of his great speed, Roger was used as a pass-receiver, a break-away runner, and also on the defense. He was one of the league's leading receivers.

PHILIPPI, PLUMLEY, POWELL, PUGH, PUTT.
RADETSKY, SCOTT, SILVERMAN, SMITH, STORY.

Lettermen

BOB PHILLIPPI—This quick-stepping Indian end was always a headache to those who tried to alter his goal.

DAN PLUMLEY—Dan earned the reputation of being one of the hardest driving backs in the league, as many opponents will testify.

JOHN POWELL—Although normally an end, John was called upon on many occasions to toss the pigskin to the waiting receivers; this he did with uncanny success.

BILL PUGH—Bill was hampered by injury much of this year, but nevertheless came back strong toward the end of the season.

JIM PUTT—In filling the job of single-caller on this year's varsity, Jim did exceptionally well. He also ran and passed with great accuracy.

STEWART RADETSKY—Stew was mainly a defensive player, and was especially effective in the defensive backfield.

TOM SCOTT—"Big Tom" was constantly at the bottom of the pile, and we expect much of this rough junior during the next season.

RONNIE SILVERMAN—Although only a junior, Ronnie made honorable mention for All-City. We will be seeing much of this hard-driving back.

BOB SMITH—Bob, a fast and hard-charging back, carried much of the offensive burden this year and was never caught out of position.

DON STORY—Don had an outstanding season at guard although he received an injury toward the end of the season. He is in good condition now.

ONCE AGAIN this year the Bravelets were dominating their league. Under the able direction of Coach Kenneth Hawthorne, the Tribe was victorious in all their league contests except for a 6-0 loss to Northeast and a 6-6 tie with East. Also highlighting the season was a victory over Shawnee-Mission which may foretell a future varsity victory over the Kansans. In two games with Wyandotte, the Bravelets split even.

There was a freshman team again this year that played a full schedule of games. This team should provide many excellent players for next year's elevens.

COACH
HAWTHORNE

A THREE WAY tie for second place in the Interscholastic League was the reward for this year's cagers. The Tribe started the season slowly, losing three of their first four games. However, this can be overlooked considering two of these were against Shawnee-Mission and Wyandotte, ranked first and second respectively in the state of Kansas. After these first four games, the varsity seemed to catch its stride and was victorious over Pem-Day, Raytown, and the Alumni to round out the pre-season games.

The league campaign opened with the reigning champion, Northeast, which was eventually to grab its second championship in a row. After this initial defeat Southwest steadily improved. It whipped East, undefeated Paseo, and barely nosed by Southeast 72-70 in a record-breaking contest. An upset by Central dimmed championship hopes, but the Tribe came back against Manual and Westport to gain a second-place tie.

Although upset by East in the opening round of the regionals, Southwest ended the season with a record of 10 wins and 5 losses.

Basketball Lettermen

BILL CHILES—This hard-driving Indian was especially effective on drive in jump shots, as well as in leading the team's defense.

DON JONES—Being the tallest member of the team, Don was called upon for much of the rebounding and tipping, both of which he accomplished exceptionally well.

TOM KING—Tom was noted for his deadly set shots, and also his ability to outguess the opponent and break up the play.

DICK LOTT—This husky senior showed his talent at basketball, although specializing in football, by spurring the team to victory in many a clutch game.

BOB MARGOLIN—Bob was one of the best floor players in the league, and he could always be counted on to come through with a basket when it was most needed.

GEORGE MILBURN—A leader on the defense, George was also an excellent ball handler. He was continually hustling and never let down under pressure.

DUNCAN MILLER—This Indian speedster had probably the quickest reflexes and movements seen in the league this season. He was a good shot as well.

JOHN POWELL — "Big John" was the team's leading scorer this season. He proved his worth time and again with his high point total and his continually fine defensive performance.

COACH EWING

THIS YEAR the B Team was again under the direction of George Ewing who has continually turned out fine squads. The team itself won far more than its fair share of games and was considered no pushover. The season was high-lighted by a brilliant victory over the Shawnee-Mission quintet. Playing for the team rather than for individual glory, the boys looked exceptionally well. We will be looking forward to next year when the fortunes of the varsity will depend on this year's B Team.

1952 TRACK

LAST YEAR Southwest had probably the greatest track season in its history. The season opened with an easy victory, the Tribe taking the high school crown at the Big Seven Indoor Meet. From there the team went on to capture an unaltering stream of trophies.

First came a second place in the state indoor meet, which was followed by a fabulous display of talent at the Shawnee-Mission relays. Then the team went on to win the relay at the K. U. relays and to cop the St. Joseph Invitational Meet. After placing second in the state outdoor meet, the track team easily succeeded in taking the city title by more than doubling the score of the closest rival. A record point total had been run up.

In speaking of records, however, this was far from the only one. All during the season relay and individual records were being set wherever the Tribe competed. It is probable that many of these will stand for quite some time. The 1952 Track Team will long stand in the memory of many.

SHIP AHOY!

Redskin Revels of 1953

PASSENGERS, crew, well-wishing onlookers, students, parents, and friends—all were gathered on the Southwest shore on the evenings of November twentieth and twenty-first to witness the launching of the 1952 Redskin Revels.

All arrived in expectation of a gay, frolicsome voyage aboard the S.S. Mirth, while tempting dreams of Hawaiian and French girls danced before their eyes. Anchor was raised to the tapping rhythm of the dancers at the gangplank, while the tunes of "Of Thee I Sing" and "Harbor Lights" drifted from shore upon the stiff sea breezes. All aboard the S.S. Mirth, from the crew to the stowaways, each with his own particular talent or humor, provided happy entertainment for an expectant audience.

Up to their sailor caps in wishful thinking, the gobs musically declared "There's Nothing Like a Dame," while the envisionments of their wishes appeared to dance with them. No such voyage would have been a total success without "The Old Soft Shoe," nor would the passenger list have been complete without A Southern Girl on the Ship. Travelers and spectators were serenaded with the old favorites "Lady of Spain," "Over the Rainbow," and "Grand Central Station." And humor and agility were not lacking, for even a close second to Jerry Lewis was on board, along with the acrobats and hillbillies. "It's in the Book" created a hilarious atmosphere that was carried even to shore, setting a rollicking tempo.

Talent was bountiful aboard ship. Chopin's "Waltz in E Minor" slipped into an easy-going version of "Tea for Two" at the hands of one versatile performer, and "Slaughter on Tenth Avenue" recalled the memory of the quickly disappearing shore. The peppy interpretations of "Show Business" contrasted with the mellower "You Belong to Me" and "The World Is Waiting for the Sunrise."

Destination France! Travelers were struck with a not too serious case of the "American in Paris" Blues, but were quickly revived "On the Riviera."

HOW DULL and colorless our assemblies would be without that proper lighting and stage arrangement that is necessary for all programs. Yet the members of the stage crew who work so hard to achieve just the right effects for all Southwest productions and assemblies receive little acclaim.

Devoting hours after school for preparing and rehearsing, the boys worked hard to make the Redskin Revels and senior play successful and exercised ingenuity and alertness in perfecting the stage backgrounds.

Each member shares the responsibility of producing the best possible lighting and sound pick-ups, of sometimes building and placing suitable stage settings, of finding his way among the maze of pulleys and ropes to select the ones for the right curtain or backdrop. Moreover, each member does his job willingly and with a spirit of cooperation and hard work.

Other activities, also, demand their time and experience. Members of the stage crew are always on hand after school to operate the lights and help out with the taking of the many Sachem pictures.

A good round of applause is due to this conscientious group that adds so much to our school productions and devotes so much time and effort to perfecting them. They are a vital part of our school functions.

A REFRESHING interlude to Southwest's own typically teen-age highschool daze, was the 1953 version of a typically co-ed "College Daze." Presented by members of the senior class on the evenings of April seventeenth and eighteenth, the play, a three act comedy by John Rand, was seen and well acclaimed by a warmly humored audience of students, parents, and friends.

Bursting with enthusiasm for dear old Hartdale U., a small town midwestern school, collegiates breeze in and out of Ma Mitchell's Coffee Shoppe—the campus hang-out—trying their trials, cheering their tribulations, and daily brewing tempests in their coke bottles. Here meet Shirley Mitchell, Ma's daughter; Lana Henderson, a school belle; "Poodles" Skinner, always on the prowl for a man; Ella Rose Peters, a student who studies; and Vivian Parker, who majors in men with money. Completing the coffee shop gang are Bill Taylor, the basketball captain, and Ossie Victor, son of the town's wealthy banker.

It is at Ma Mitchell's that Harold "Duke" Duquet, a Joe College from the millionaire set, makes a rather painful splash on his first arrival and soon manages to take first place as the Campus's fresh freshman. However, before he has made himself completely notorious, he bumps into John "Slim" Wiggins, a well-meaning but awkward rustic, with whom he trades identities—cash, clothes, and convertible included in the deal. This little switch proves to complicate the lives of both boys and of nearly everyone else concerned.

And of course, it is at Ma Mitchell's where the new "Slim" Wiggins takes a job and succeeds in antagonizing the co-ed crowd. However, he proves to be a "good joe" despite his drawbacks, and many of the gang hesitatingly admit that they like him. Yet matters now become so involved that they can be straightened out only by the two boys reclaiming their names. Unfortunately, since the Hartdale dean would not find such an act amusing, they are forced to keep the switched identities until Ossie Victor, who has discovered their secret, tells all.

As in all three-act comedies about college life, in the end everything jives. Ye Olde Coffee Shoppe, which has been threatened with disaster by Mr. Victor, the town banker, is saved at the last minute by some ready cash from the Duquet trust fund; neither boy is suspended from school for registering under a false name; and every guy finds his doll in time for the finale.

Viewing the mix-ups, discouragements, and victories of such college students either in retrospect or in anticipation, the audience seemed to feel the mental agonies that each new problem brought and was happily satisfied as each was solved in its own way.

That the Band is active in school and community functions is evident because of the many programs in which it participates, such as the following: American Legion Americanism Contest, Missouri Alumni football rally, assemblies, football and basketball games, American Royal Parade, school activities, All-city Band Festival.

WITH THE many programs going on at Southwest, there are numerous occasions in which the orchestra performs. Some of these are the Senior Play, school activities, Spring Concert, All-City Orchestra Festival, community activities, Christmas Vespers, and graduation. Opportunities for soloists are plentiful with the many civic groups that ask for entertainment.

Phantasy

by Mary Jannet Mann

IF WE COULD, from a vantage point afar, from the vast reaches of space, observe the earth, we might be able to understand what circumstances, events, and forces shape the destinies of the beings who populate this one small part of the whirling universe. Let us, in imagination, try such an experiment. Would it possibly be like this? In such a locale?

The lane is dusty and narrow. Over it extend the green-clothed branches of trees. A lazy breeze sweeps the incense of lilacs through the air. Beside the lane runs a brooklet, merrily rippling and tinkling, gathering momentum as it pursues its course. Birds sing and crickets chirp their roundelay.

A young boy, alive with interest, skips down the lane. A delighted smile on his face, he admires the beauty all about him. He sifts the smooth, silky dust through his bare, brown toes—his whole body quivering with pleasure. A voice speaks, high and eager, and he turns toward a tow-headed boy near his own age whose bright eyes reflect a similar joyous anticipation of the day before him. The two urchins need no introducing as they grasp each other's hands, sinking into a world of make-believe only children fully know. Carefree and gay, they explore Nature's mysteries.

As time passes, our youngster knows he must leave, for shadows are shortening, mid day is approaching. He waves goodbye to Happiness, for that was the other boy's name, knowing they will meet again. He pursues a butterfly and pauses to investigate a slow-moving turtle. Idly, he tosses a pebble into a limpid pool, watching the ever-widening ripples made.

Suddenly, his ears catch the sound of laughter—fresh, hearty laughter, resounding deeply as might sounds issuing from the downbeat of a kettle drum. Finally a jaunty fellow bounces into view. A ridiculous hat is perched above one ear and his weird vestments are equally absurd. The boy is arrested, wondering, since the stranger never ceases laughing. Peals of laughter boom forth and his face is streaked with tears, by-products of his mirth. Staring, the boy soon chuckles, then finds he must join in the laughter, for the fool's gaiety is strangely infectious.

Inspired by his encounter with Humor, such was the clown's name, our boy ambles on. Though a hearty laugh is a most refreshing experience, it can be only temporary for most people. So the lad, in even higher spirits, moves briskly along his way. The sun, higher in the heavens, shines brightly on him, revealing he is taller now—a youth approaching manhood.

At the top of a rise, he sees a slight figure. Approaching, he perceives it is a girl, whose eyes are demurely lowered, her hands placidly clasped over her starched and ruffled apron. Glossy brown braids fall over her shoulders. At the sound of the youth's footsteps, she looks up, and the boy finds himself observing a clear, frank face whose deep brown eyes question his arrival. A tingling feeling shivers down his spine, leaving his head dizzy with delight. Then the girl's gaze falls and a blush overspreads her face. A realization that life would be forever richer from remembrance of this encounter makes the young man reluctant to continue his journey, for this enchanting girl is Love and her memory would be with him always. But a feeling of destiny is urging him onward, so with a smile and blowing a kiss back to Love, he continues his journey.

His step quickens as he is joined by a soldier, staunch, erect and proud, but lately returning from a war. His combat record is evidenced by several glittering medals. He is returning to his farm to cultivate and reclaim fields, overrun by weeds during his absence. The youth takes an instant liking to this eager fellow as they stride together down the road. What better companion is possible than this soldier whose name is Ambition?

Our youth, now a man, no longer skips down the ever widening road but picks his way carefully and surely. Suddenly he hears horses' hooves pounding, drumming a rhythm through the earth. Coming into view is a stately carriage drawn by four white horses. It is abreast and he can see its occupant, an imposing lady, dressed in silks and satins. She smiles down on the stalwart young man and tosses him a gold coin. Startled, he eyes the carriage rolling on its way. A golden crest gleams on the door, the crest of Lady Luck. Knowing well that fortune, good and evil, is often governed by the vagaries of luck, he wonders what the smile of the gracious lady portends.

Tossing the coin in his hand, he saunters on. The road, no longer straight, makes an occasional turn. As he watches the road, two meets a very old man, notable for his extraor- people approach, a man and a woman. The man is short, paunchy, and very much out of breath from carrying two packs heavy with gold. The woman, dressed completely in scarlet, perceiving our man, runs lightly to him, whirling about him in a strange dance. Walking steadily onward, he disregards both. The woman turns away, her face sullen and black with anger and jealousy. Trudging on, our man well knows he has just met Greed and Temptation.

Rounding a turn, the man sees coming through a garden gate a simple country maid. Her face is uplifted to the sky. Dressed in the plainest clothes, her hands grasping a small wooden cross, she seems inspired, glowing with happiness. She walks slowly, looking down only to smile at the tiny white dog romping beside her. The man retards his step that he may look carefully at this maiden. He feels he should recognize her and, asking her name, he knows he should. Her name is Faith and the little dog is Devotion.

The man is young no longer. His hair is white. His step, faltering and slow, still carries him ever onward along the road. He dinarily large head, now bowed forward to his chest. When with great effort he lifts it, his piercing gaze sweeps the earth. Our traveler talks with him long, for here is Wisdom. Our man, though venerable and with knowledge that age and experience have brought, realizes that there is much, much in life still unknown to him.

He wanders on down the road, noticing that the river, once a brook, no longer follows the road but, wide and quiet, flows in an opposite direction. At length, the road leads through a secluded valley. Before him, as he stumbles along his way, the old man discerns a tall, slender form. A lady stands there, majestic, her beauty so exquisite, ethereal, can never be equaled. Her pale skin contrasts with her black garments. The wind, blowing harshly, tosses her raven hair and whips her robe against her body. The old man walks closer. Her countenance reveals a sweet sadness. The old man stands before her. Her eyes, dark, luminous, compelling, are lifted to his. In them he sees a promise. Quietly taking his hand, she leads him off the road. And her name is Death.

The Rescued Treasure

by Susan Shipman

THE ALL-ENGULFING waves of time sweep over ancient civilizations, destroying what time itself had once erected. Century after century, the tides rush in upon the mighty and swallow the foundations—the walls tumble, the silence glides in on listless wings. On a foreign shore a new foundation is built with stronger timber. What is left. . . .

What could be left, except the lasting fragments that time can outdate but never sweep away completely. Fragments of melodious song, of ideas, of a life now gone, may float on these waves until eager hands pluck them from the torrent. I found just such a fragment; and with it I pushed aside the waves. . . .

There is a little statue standing in the main hall of an art gallery. It is very old. It is not beautiful, nor does it attract much attention. No, it is not beautiful—it has attributes much more lasting. It has dignity, power, and a certain richness.

I first saw this statue at dusk. The shadows in the main hall were deepening into long, black stains that stretched on and on over the marble floor. These deep, secretive shadows halted abruptly before a pale, cool light that showered the surrounding darkness in an amber mist. In the center of this nebulous light was situated a small, square-shaped case. Inside the square stood an Egyptian figurine in a remarkable state of preservation.

Watching him from across the room, I had the oddest sensation. I felt as if four thousand years had silently slipped away. Egypt, personified in this small statue, filled my senses. Advancing slowly, so as not to break the spell, I gazed with eagerness at the occupant.

The nobility of his bearing easily disclosed his station in life. His dress was simple, but elegantly so. He wore no other garment than the white linen that was tied about his waist and fell in pleated folds to his ankles. Inserted in the wood of his chest was a finely linked necklace. Colored in pastel shades of blue and yellow, the ornament indicated that he had not succumbed to the evil of vanity. He was bent lightly forward—imperceptibly balanced on the instep of one foot. His feet were long and slender—the toes carved with infinite patience. Where the linen fell away, one could see the muscular calves flexed slightly in the fluid motion that had been superbly caught by the sculptor. His chest, too, was muscular with slim, straight shoulders held slightly rigid. The arms were supple, but extremely long; and they terminated in a pair of aristocratic, tapering fingers that swung loosely at his sides in careless activity. They were mobile hands and slightly exaggerated—probably to enhance their sensitive strength. You could see them lightly fingering a delicate lotus blossom and, again, sternly directing cringing slaves about their duties.

The head was proudly set with the chin lifted slightly. It was not arrogance, but more a calm and carefully controlled pride that made this chin lift high. Etched with a sense of power, the mouth neither smiled nor frowned. The nose was long and sloping; the nostrils flared ever so slightly. Quietly gazing out from beneath arched, carefully detailed eyebrows were his strangely arresting eyes. Almond in form, they were black—a shining, soft, sooty color.

His was a foreign, mysterious face with ancient impressions inscribed upon it. The pigmentation of his skin glistened with mellow golden color highlighted by undertones of reddish-bronze that were translucent through the ochre hue. Seen in profile, his face was excited, and then subdued. His entire face was a composite of grace, strength, and dignity —Egypt at its best. Suddenly, I began to understand him.

This person had been born more than four thousand five hundred years ago. Yet, here he was, re-incarnated in wood from the cedars of Lebanon, thousands of miles away from his own world. Here was the symmetry and supine grace of the Nile—electrified by a will and a mind.

One could look into his eyes and in their lustrous image walk and talk, eat and drink with him, as him, in his world. One could sleep and then rise with the sun, believing, as he believed, that the sun was a god, that it betokened rebirth and renewal of life.

With lissom step he might approach the chambers of the Pharaoh and pass through the ornately carved gates to bow down before the living image of the gods. He could recline in gold chairs embossed with the finest ebony and ivory, imported from the farthest ends of the known world. Nubian slaves, glistening in the sun, might assist him as he hunted and fished among the blue pools of sunken gardens. He might relax while being anointed with oils perfumed by the fragrance of the hyssop blossom. He could collect about him the culture of the globe, ranging from the statues with glowing agate eyes to the sensuous softness of rugs prepared from skins of the black panther and the tawny lions of Lybia. With such a guide as he, I did them, too.

I could follow him through his life with wonder, until at last his ka was ready to be balanced against truth and justice on the scales of Osiris. Then he is gone—but the idea of him does remain.

The rescued treasures of the past are wondrous things if we have eyes to see and minds to understand. They can tell us many things—we have only to listen. Their voices are strong; they speak wisely and well. They are the remnants of the ancients and of time. . . .

Factors in the Struggle against Communism

by Richard Lowrance

The United States is engaged in a great struggle to keep Communist totalitarianism from dominating the world and enslaving all remaining free nations. That Communism in its present imperialistic form must be destroyed before the world can enjoy true peace, is fully realized by all thinking Americans. A realistic program for accomplishing this must take many factors into consideration.

Two events of the last five years altered the world balance of power. China was conquered by the Communists, and Russia developed an atom bomb. These two historic events made Communism the military danger it is today.

In our struggle with Russia, the most important single factor is morale. Napoleon said it was three times as great a factor as anything else, but it was rated even higher by our World War Commanders. Armies, such as Italy's, that lacked morale invariably lost.

In the Second World War, Russia's people displayed excellent morale even under the most adverse conditions. Their valiant struggle against the seemingly invincible German Army will not be forgotten by history. Individual Russians worked eighteen hours a day for months. The Red Army maintained offensives despite appalling losses. The willingness to suffer extreme privations and the boundless patriotism of the Russian people are effectively exploited today by the Communists. The Russians could fight a long, bloody war with us; we could not depend on a quick collapse.

Our morale here in America is that of a proud, free people, and is undoubtedly higher than that of Russia. Brought up in the best traditions of democracy, Americans possess great determination when they are forced to fight. We haven't lost a war yet! But we shall need extraordinarily high morale if we are to overcome certain material shortcomings.

If Russia went to war today, she could have every confidence that her army would be able to defeat any allied force now in the field. Russia has numerical superiority in all tactical land weapons, and is noted for effective uses of masses of men and guns.

At the beginning of a war, Russia would certainly deal many hard blows, but in the long run several factors would increasingly impair her fighting power. Aside from any damage we might do, the already inadequate transportation system would be unable effectively to serve war purposes and at the same time transport essential civilian goods. Another difficulty would arise in controlling the populations of occupied countries.

In the struggle with America, Russia's principal handicap springs from the qualities of her people. There are a dozen different races and many different languages spoken. Aside from the language difficulty, there is the limitation of peasant mentality combined with lack of education. As long as all Russians were farmers, lack of education was of little consequence; but now that Russia is becoming an industrial country, it is a very great handicap. Mechanical goods produced in Russia, always excepting arms, are of poor quality and are ruined unnecessarily by misuse. It will take years to rectify this condition, and it may never be wholly corrected.

Russia's industrial ineptitude is in strong contrast to America's industrial genius, which may be the greatest single factor deterring Russia from full-scale war. Our industrial potential is partly due to our economic system, but even more to the mechanical and practical knowledge of the American people, and their high standards of education.

Our factories are capable of giving the armed forces of the United States mobility and fire power not dreamed of by Russia. America has the lead in the field of atomic energy and has already exploded a hydrogen bomb. In addition, she sends the other free countries military equipment to assist them in resisting Communist aggression.

America has a great advantage over Russia in the field of science. Constant scientific research is useful in both war and peace. Our scientists, who plan our modern weapons, also discover new medicines and treatments for the disease ridden. The United States is able to give scientific and technical assistance to the entire free world. If we are to remain the most powerful nation in the world, we must maintain the lead in the field of scientific research.

America has some conditions on the debit side. She is at a strategic disadvantage because of her long supply lines to Asia and Europe, but even more important, she does not possess the initiative in the Cold War. The American Army is poorly organized compared to the Russian. A great deal of money has been wasted by defense officials, and this has led to criticisms, doubts, and lowering of public morale.

In this determined struggle of ideologies, it has been necessary for each of the basic antagonists, Russia and the United States, to gain allies to aid its cause. Russia has used force of arms and bloody revolutions to gain territory while we have tried to win allies by friendly measures such as the Marshall plan. Her allies are satellites; we have a very mixed bag of friends including one semi-communistic country!

Russia's principal ally, or satellite, is Communist China. It cannot be denied that Russia was clever to win over China at a time of widespread discontent in that country. After the Communists took over, Russia gave China military and technical assistance. The Korean war proved the soundness of this policy.

The European satellites are of less military value than China, but they are economically very necessary. It is doubtful whether they could break away unless there is a complete collapse of Russia.

The principal ally of the United States is the British Commonwealth. Although Great Britain, once all powerful, must be content with a secondary role in this struggle, the Royal Air Force is one of the few assets of free Europe, and the always magnificent Royal Navy is another factor in our favor.

The French Union is also allied with us. A militarily weak France is fighting a costly war in Indo-China to save Southeast Asia from Communism. France is also the keystone of our European defense force.

America has other allies in the world, some resisting Communism courageously, and others of dubious value to us. America and her allies are constantly squabbling about the policies, and even goals, of the free world, while, on the other hand, Russia alone makes the policies for the entire Communist world.

Two great nations, India and Germany, are not fully established in either camp. If both should join one side, that side would surely defeat the other in case of war. For that reason, we must never allow Communist governments to be formed in these countries.

If the United States develops its potentials and resources intelligently, and treats other nations fairly at all times, the factors in its favor will become overwhelming, and Communism will surely die the convulsive death it deserves.

A morally and materially strong United States will always insure the security of free men. Wherever oppression of human dignity raises its ugly head, or wherever the manacled wrists of enslaved human beings are lifted in prayer for deliverance, there the efforts of the United States must be directed to destroy the great evil of misgovernment which man inflicts upon himself.

Stick with the Boy Next Door

by Joyce Steele

LET'S FACE IT. I'm not a raving beauty. Mother Nature gave me nice, soft brown hair, but forgot to install a built-in curl; also, my eyes are too big; and my face is heart-shaped with a slightly upturned nose, which, along with the wide-set eyes, gives me a perpetual "Wha' hoppen?" look. I'm not short and doll-like; neither am I the tall, slinky siren type. Just average. But still, I'm hep to bop talk and wise to the taboos of high school life. F'r instance, I wouldn't be caught dead wearing a pair of colored socks. I know it's cool to wear jeans and boys' baggy sweaters; and, when you dress up, boxy middy suits, real high heels, and crazy cloche hats. I have a real gone collection of cool platters; also I stay up till one at night listening to disc jockies. In other words, I'm in the know. So I wonder why I ever thought I could attract Steve Talbert?

Steve is a doll. Not the "it" boy at school, but still a doll. Tall, muscular in the right places, with wavy blonde hair that falls into his eyes when he plays basketball. He's a letterman, and a cool dancer, and has a line you can hang a washing on. Sometimes he talks to me in class. He practices his party jokes on me. I guess because no one else will listen to them in their raw, unpolished form.

He used to slide into his seat and grin, "Hey, dig this crazy oration." And I would sit there and laugh, and dig it, and say, "Cool," or some other little gem of a conversation piece.

Maybe you'd say I have a split personality. I'd sit there and be practically dumb in Steve's presence, and then I'd go home and turn downright garrulous when I had only a picture of a movie star to talk to. Chuck Phillips, who is the tallest, handsomest star in Hollywood, stared back soulfully at me and let me do all the talking I never can do around Steve. In my scrapbooks are dozens of pictures of him that get a going-over every day. Pop swears this isn't normal. Maybe he's right. Grown-ups who think all teen-agers are movie mad have their wires crossed. All my girl friends get a kick out of my being a real gone movie fan. Mom says she's sure I'll outgrow this stage. Maybe I'm starting to already. Yesterday might even have been the sudden end of it.

The day started out in its normal gruesome manner. Honestly, Big Ben couldn't be any louder than my alarm clock. Everytime I hear it I hit the ceiling, which, if you've never tried it, is a pretty jarring way to be awakened.

I always stagger downstairs half asleep. It takes the shock of seeing Dodo in pin curls and no make-up to slap me awake. Dodo is my older sister. You know the typical older sister type. Always spending her time worrying about her looks.

Dick was at the breakfast table. Dick lives next door. That is, he's supposed to. Around meal time we all wonder. It is nothing unusual to see him eating his second (and third) meals at our house.

Dick and I grew up together. No, I guess I shouldn't say grew. Dick's still growing. He is now pushing six feet. By his appetite you'd think it was seven. But somehow you never notice height on Dick. Or the fact that he has dark, curly hair and sleepy eyes. Dick has been around as part of the scenery for years, and you just can't make scenery come alive, no matter how hard you try.

"How's Steve these days?" Dick inquired brightly.

"Swell. He talked to me yesterday," I bubbled excitedly. I told Dick one of Steve's leftover bop jokes. Dick didn't laugh.

"Don't you get it?"

"Sure."

"Don't you like it?"

"To be brutally frank—no." That's what I like about Dick. Such honesty. Such refreshing candor. Ugh!

He devoured a couple of slices of toast in silence.

"Going to the sneak preview tonight?" he asked at last.

"Sure," I mumbled with my mouth full. "It might be Chuck."

"Spare me," he groaned.

Well, that's just a sample of one of our brilliant conversations.

Third hour I slid into my seat with only seconds to spare before the bell rang. Steve was right behind me.

"Boy, we made it!" he breathed as he slammed his books down on his desk. "Hey, Barbie, did 'ja read that poem last night? Pretty dreary, wasn't it?"

"Yeah, real morbid," I answered. I didn't really think so, but only a square bear would admit it.

Steve went on, "First time I've done any homework in here for a long time. I usually don't crack a book. It's a dull class." Wearily he opened his book. "Now take Longfellow. He had to have morals in his poems. That was okay a hundred years ago, but it's dead now." He looked at me for agreement.

I shook myself mentally. "Don't just sit there with your teeth in your mouth and your hair on your head, Barbie, you nut!" I thought. "Say something witty." I didn't I just nodded.

Steve rambled on with a couple of bop jokes. Suddenly he looked at me with what in a more intellectual student would be considered concern. "I didn't study for that history test this afternoon. Did you?"

"Test? Oh, that's right! No! I didn't!"

Steve laughed. "Oh well. I won't flunk. I'm gonna' ditch. Why don't you?"

I wanted to; I opened my mouth to say so. Then I saw he really wasn't interested; he didn't even wait for an answer. He was already talking to another girl.

Mr. James rapped on the desk for attention just then. I brightened as a small white ball sailed over onto my desk from Steve's direction.

Happily I opened the note and then stared at the terribly impersonal and familiar words. "Can I borrow a pencil?" Darn! He must think I manufacture them.

It was before seventh hour that I looked longingly from the window and saw Steve shuffling along the street with that lazy, self-confident slouch of his. I could have been walking out of school too, except that I have such a conscientious conscience. But I felt happy because Steve was ditching. I love people who are daring.

"I saw Steve leaving after sixth hour," Dick remarked at dinner that night. He had come over for dessert, as when doesn't he?

"I know," I told him proudly. "He was ditching because he had a test he didn't study for."

"Ah-h. You talked to dreamboat today." Dick doesn't like Steve particularly, but he never fails to ask about him. He gets a charge out of tearing him down.

He'll make cracks like, "I'm surprised. I thought he was too stupid to carry on an intelligent conversation. He ditches more than he goes."

I refused to rise to the bait.

Dick laughed. "All brawn and no brain. Reminds me of Chuck Phillips—"

He stopped as Mom brought in the dessert. Any kind of food will stop Dick. I suppose all boys are like that.

It was cherry pie for the third time this week. That's because of Dodo. She's practicing different recipes to use when (and if) she gets married. She cooks each one over and over until she's got the hang of it. She hasn't yet caught on to cherry pie.

I slid into my seat, followed by Dick who had his hands full of popcorn. All through the newsreel I thought about Steve. He talked to me a lot in school. Maybe—just maybe, he really liked me. Right in the middle of Donald Duck I floated away on my own little daydream.

Dick brought me back to the theater with a sharp jab of his elbow.

"What. . . .?"

He jerked his head toward the aisle. At the end of our row was Steve, tall and confident looking, and smiling. But not at me. My heart plunged down to my toes when I saw the small redhead he was with. One of the sophomore big wheels. Just the right girl for even bigger wheel Steve Talbert.

They started edging over people to get to two seats beyond me, and as we stood up I held my breath. Steve crawled over Dick, and looked at me briefly, then through me as thought I wasn't there, and he went on. I slid back on my spine and suddenly the screen was all wiggly and blurry. I might have known I was a nobody to Steve. Just someone to talk at in school. Of course he would pick a real cool cat to go around with.

Dick looked funny. Actually mad.

"I keep telling you that Talbert's a bum," he snorted. "Too snobby to even speak."

"Don't say any more," I sniffed. "Just shut up, Dick."

For Dick he was surprising meek. "Yeah, okay. You okay, Barbie?"

"Yes," I snapped. "Shut up!" I sat through the rest of the movie seeing nothing. When the sneak came on Dick pushed me hard.

"Look Barbie! Chuck! Look!"

"I can see! Why are you so happy?"

"Well, aren't you. You should feel better now."

Coming from Dick, that was strange. He doesn't like Chuck. To be blunt, he hates him. But I didn't wonder about him long. Sometimes he knows exactly what I'm thinking.

"Quit staring at me," he said uncomfortably. "I don't like Chuck. But you do, so for gosh sakes watch him and stop sniffing." Ah, that sounded more like Dick. You know, he isn't half bad at times. Even cute, being so tall, and kind of little-boyish.

After a while I looked at him again out of the corner of my eye. He was deeply engrossed in the movie. That's one thing. He's as crazy about movies as I am. I guess he's more my type than Steve will ever be. He even understands me. And darn it! He is cute. Why didn't I notice that before? Maybe after looking at him for years I wasn't really seeing him. Well, last night I noticed him, but plenty. I stared. It annoyed him.

"'Smatter? My hair all of a sudden turn green or something?"

"No, crazy. Give me some popcorn." I grinned at him, a great big grin. Because I liked him a lot. Why should I dream of a basketball letterman? I'll stick with the boy next door.
